

Abstract, Urimal yŏn'gu(Research of our language) 15. The Korean Linguistic Association, Pusan, 2004.

On a New Orientation of School Grammar Education of Korean

Yong-Kun Ko

The high school grammar of Korean has been published as the single-unified book since 1985. Before that time it was the authorized textbook. But the textbook had been compiled by the government since 1985, because it was difficult to teach owing to different grammatical systems of the textbook. During the past 15 years the school grammar of Korean had been compiled 4 times, but the 1985's system had been preserved until 2001. In the 2002's textbook there are many changes of grammatical systems including the establishment of adverbial endings. In this paper I assert that adverbial endings should not be set up in the system of conclusive endings and it is not tenable to treat all the connective endings as adverbial endings. Besides, I emphasize that connective adverbs could not be treated as adverbials and that speech level endings should be described in the same place as sentence-conclusive endings. In the near future, I will propose that the school grammar textbook should restore the past authorized text book system.